Abstract: Eleven American subspecies are transferred from Potentilla into Drymocallis. Thirteen nomenclatural combinations in the rank of variety in ten American species of Potentilla are proposed.

Keywords: nomenclatural combinations, Drymocallis, Potentilla, N. America

Basing on the morphological differences in the structure of anthers (SOJÁK 1989, 2006) and on the results of molecular methods (ERIKSSON et al. 1998, 2003), it has been found out that the Potentilla rupestris L. group does not belong to the genus Potentilla L., but that it represents a separate genus Drymocallis FOURR. ex RYDB. related to Fragaria L. and Sibbaldia L.

The Eurasian taxa from the Potentilla rupestris group I transferred into Drymocallis a time ago (SOJÁK 1989). However, there remain a rather amount of American taxa (subspecies), which still are waiting to be transferred from Potentilla into Drymocallis. In their list I start from the thorough and trustworthy study of the monographer KECK (1940) and from my studies of numerous specimens preserved in New York (NY).

D. g. subsp. pseudorupesris (RYDB.) SOJÁK comb. nova; bas. Potentilla pseudorupesris RYDB. in Bull. Torrey Bot. Club 24: 250. 1897 (T.: RYDBERG 598 NY !).

D. g. subsp. reflexa (GREENE) SOJÁK comb. nova; bas. Potentilla glandulosa var. reflexa GREENE, Fl. Francisc. 1: 65. 1891 (T.: GREENE s.n. ND !).

In the studies of American species I drew some conclusions different from the opinions of recent American authors. For example, I principally dissent from HITCHCOCK & CRONQUIST (1961) who classified into the synonymy of P. pensylvanica L. even such clear and doubtless species as P. bipinnatifida DOGL. ex HOOK. nom. cons. propos. (P. missourica HORNEM. ex LINDL.) and P. virgulata A. NELS. (correct name is P. litoralis Rydb.). These species in no case are closely related to P. pensylvanica and, according to KURBATSKIY's dividing of the genus Potentilla into sections, belong even to various sections (Multifidae and Adenocarpae). As a separate species I regard also P. lasiodonta RYDB. (HOHLI & PACKER 1976 described it repeatedly as P. finitima).

The very complicated P. gracilis complex I recommend (basing mainly on the differences in the dentation of leaflets and indumentum of leaves) to divide in six species, viz. P. gracilis LINDL. s. str., P. filipes RYDB., P. flabelliformis LEHM., P. fastigiata NUTT. ex TORR. & A. GRAY, P. pectinisepta RYDB. and P. nuttalii LEHM. To all seeming, frequently a hybridization occurs among them, their dividing lines sometimes are unclear, and therefore the opinions of various authors are different.

In my opinion, P. pulcherrima LEHM. is derived from P. filipes × P. hippiana LEHM. P. diversifolia LEHM. I regard as a hybrid derivate of the combination P. glaucophylla LEHM. × P. hippiana. The names P. quinquefolia RYDB. and P. furcata PORSILD must be replaced by the name P. rubricaulis LEHM. s. orig. (the last-mentioned name was incorrectly used for the arctic P. pedersenii RYDB.).

The following Potentillas described originally mostly as species I recommend evaluate as varieties.
